THE GUNMAKER OF MOSCOW.

A TALE OF THE EMPIRE UNDER PETER THE GREAT.

CHAPTER I.

THE GUNMAKER AND THE MONK, The time at which we open our story is mid-winter, and towards the close of the seven-teenth century. Russia had passed through the long and bitter ordeal of national Night. The Tartar yoke had been worn till the very The Tartar yoke had been worn till the very bones of the nation were galled; and when this was thrown off civil dissensions and insurrections commenced. The Poles and Swedes plundered the country, and amid general tunuit and confusion some half dozen men were clamoring for the throne. At length a few patriotic citizens, pledging everything they field dear on earth to the cause of freedom from this curse of anarchy, and headed by a noble prince and an humble, patriotic butcher, made a bold stand to save the country. Moscow was retaken, and Michael Rooutcher, made a bold stand to save the country. Mossow was retaken, and Michael Romanoff was chosen Czar; and this illustrious family still occupies the imperial throne. And now the day of Russian greatness dawned; but the sun was not fairly up—the broad light opened not upon the empire—until Peter came to the throne.

opened not upon the empire—until Peter came to the throne.

In the department of the Sloboda—the suburbs of Moscow—and very near the river Moskwa, stood an humble cot, the exterior of which betrayed a neatness of arrangement and show of taste that more than made up for its smallness of size. Nor was it so very small in fact, but only in contrast; for near at hand about it stood many large, shabby, dirty-looking structures that overlooked the prim cot, as bleak mountains may look down upon a verdant hill. And within, this cot was as neat as without. The two spartments lu frost, one cant bill. And within, this cot was as next as without. The two spartments in front, one of which was only used in wintor, were furnished not only with nextness, but with a fair show of ornament and luxury. Back of these were a large cooking and dining-room, and two small bedrooms; and back still from these was an artisan's shop, and other out-buildings. This shop was devoted to the manufacture of firearms, mostly. Some swords, and other edged weapons, were made here upon special application. pecial application.

special application.

The gunmaker now stood by his forge, watching the white smoke as it curled up toward the throat of the chimney. He was a young man, not over three-and-twenty, and possessed a frame of more than ordinary symmetry and muscular development. He was not large—not above medium size—but a single giance at the swelling chest, the broad shoulders, and the sinewy ridges of the bare arms, told at once that he was master of great physical power. His features were regular arms, told at once that he was master of great physical power. His features were regular, yet strongly marked, and eminently handsome; his brow, which was full and high, was half cover it; while his eyes, which were of a bright, brilliant, deep gray in color, lent a cast of genius to the intellect of the brow. His name was furie Novel. His father had been killed in the then late war with the Turks, and the son, leaving his mether with a sufficiency of sustenance, went to Spain soon after the be-son, leaving his mother with a sufficiency of sustenance, went to Spain soon after the be-reavement. There he found work in the most noted armories; and now, well versed in the trade, he had returned to his native city to follow his calling, and support his mother. Near by stood a boy—Paul Peepon—a bright, intelligent lad, some fifteen years of age, who had bound himself to the gunmaker for the purpose of learning the art. His hair and his eyes were darker than his masters, and if he oyes were darker than his master's, and if he oyes were darker than his master's, and if he possessed not so much sound intellect, he did surely possess an unwented degree of keen, quick wit, and a principle of unswerving inegrity.

The sun had been some time below the horizon, and the only light of any consequence that made things partially visible within the shop came from the dull blaze of the coals on the forge, as Paul over and anon bore down upon the brake that moved the bellows. Sud-denly Euric started back from the forge as his mind broke from the deep reverto into which he had fallen, and having bade his boy to see that matters were all properly disposed for the night, he turned towards the door, and was soon in the kitchen, where his mother had supper all prepared and set out.

suppor all prepared and set out.

Claudia Nevel was a noble-looking woman, and the light of her still handsome countenance was never brighter than when gazing upon her boy. She had seen the snows of fifty winters, and if they had left some silver upon her head, and some age-marks upon her face, the smalline of as many summers had left her with a thankful, loving heart, and a prayerful, hopeful soul.

snow is deep enough now. And how it blows!

"Never mind," spoke the dame, in a trustful, easy tone; "it must storm when it listeth, and we can only thank God that we have and we can only thank God that we have shelter, and pray for those who have none."

"Amen!" responded Rurie, fervently.

After this the trio remained some minutes silent, seeming to be busy in listening to the storm-notes that came pealing about the cot. The wind was high, and the snow now came dashing upon the windows with a dreary, melanchely sound. The meal was at length Ruric drew his chair close up to the fire-place, and leaning against the jam he bowed his head and pondered again. This had be-come a habit with him of late. Sometimes he come a habit with him of late. Sometimes he would sit thus during a whole hour without speaking, or even moving, and his mother did not interrupt him, as she supposed he might be solving some mechanical problem that had arisen to bother him. But those fits of thought had become too frequent, too lengthy, and too moody, for such an hypothesis, and the good woman was forced to believe that they were caused by something more remote than the business of the forge or the lathe. The youth now sat with his how resting upon his head. now sat with his brow resting upon his hand and his eyes bent upon the hearth. For hal an bour he had not moved, and his face wore an anxious, troubled look.

"Euric, my son," spoke the mother, at length, in a low, kind tone, "what is it that occupies your thoughts so much r" The young man started and turned his gaze upon his mother.

"Did you speak to me, mother?" he asked after having recalled his mind to things about

"Yes, my boy," she said," I did speak to "Tell me, my boy," she added, in a low, persuasive tone, "what it is that dwells thus upon your mind," Rurie reached out and took his mother's hand, and having gazed for some momenta into her face, he said: "I was thinking—and I have been thinking much of late, my mother—of—of—Resalind Valdal." Claudia Nevel started as she heard that same, and for the while the color forsook her "What, my dear boy-what of her have you

"What, but of one thing could I think, my

"But think, my boy: You, a more artisan; sies, the offspring of nobility and the ward of a duke—a stern, cold, proud aristocrat, who looks upon people of our station only as harsh masters look upon their beasts of burden. I fear you will find little clae but misery in such a course of theoretic."

"No, no," quickly responded the youth; "if you return it their floor of your station of the property of t such a course of thought."
"At least, my mother, I will see Rosalind; and if she loves me as I love her, and if she "Hush, my boy. Do not cherish such hopes.

"Hold," cried Rurie, starting to his feet—his handsome face flushed, and his bright eye burning, "Speak not thus—at least, not now.
I flatter not myself, but I claim a soul as I flatter not myself, but I claim a soul as pure, and a heart as noble, as any man in the land. My mind is as clear; my hopes are as high; my ambition as true to real greatness, and my will as firm as any of them. "Then follow quickly," said Ruric. "Here, give me your hand. There—now come."

The youth found the thickly-gloved hand—gloved with the softest fur—and having led the invisible applicant into the hall, he closed the door, and then led the way into the kitchen. As soon as the candle was relighted Ruric turned and gazed upon the new-comer He was a monk—and habited something lik-one of the Black Monks of St. Michael. He was of medium height and possessed a rotund-ity of person which was comical to behold. He was fat and unwieldy and waddled about with laughable steps. His lauge, black robe, which reached from his chin to his toes, was secured about the waist with a sash of the same color, and the snow, which lay upon his shoulders and back, presented a striking con-trast. Ruric brushed away the snow with his own hand, and having taken his visitor's thick fur bonnet, the latter took a seat near thick fur bonnet, the latter took a seat near the fire.

Before a word was spoken, the youthful host carefully examined his guest's features; and the latter seemed equally desirous of discovering what manner of people he had fallen in with. The monk's face was a peculiar one. The features were very dark and prominent, and almost angular in their strongly-marked outlines. His brow was very fair in mental development, and his ever were dark and brilldevelopment, and his eyes were dark and bril-liant. The slight circle of hair that escaped from beneath the tight skull-cap which he retained upon his head, was somewhat tinged with silver, though his face did not betray such advanced age as this silvery hair would seem to indicate.

seem to indicate.
"You have been caught in a severe storm, good father," said the youth, after his guest had somewhat recovered from the effects of the cold.

"Aye—that have I, my son," the monk re-"Ayo—that have I, my son," the monk returned, in a deep, rumbling tone. "I left the Kremlin this morning, little thinking of such a change. This storm has commenced since I started on my return. About half a mile from here my horse got foundered in the snow, and I left him with an honest peasant, and then started to make the rest of my way on foot; but I reckoned wildly. The driving storm blinded me, and the piling drift swallowed me up at every dozen steps. My body is not very well adapted to such work. Ha, ha!ha! But I saw your light, and I determined to seek shelter here for the night. By St. Michael, but this is a most severe storm! yet you are comfortable here."

The mouk made no answer to this save a sort of commendatory ned; and shortly after-wards the youth asked: "Do you belong here in the city, good father?"

'Aye-at present I do," the monk replied. And then, with a smile, he added; pose you would like to know whom you have thus received? My name is Valdimir, and my home is wherever I may chance to be on God's heritage. At present I am residing here in Moscow. There—could you ask me to be more frank?"
Ruric smiled, but he made no direct reply.

It was his wont to retire early, for he rose betimes to make to enter with much eagerness into conbuild the fires and prepare for the labors of versation. At length the guest asked if he could be accommodated with some electing-place, and being answered in the affirmative, the youth lighted another candle and con-ducted him to a chamber which was located directly over the kitchen, and which was very well warmed by means of several iron tubes that connected with the furusce below.

"Mother," said Ruric, as soon as he had re-turned to the kitchen, "who is that man?" "How should I know?" "But have you nover seen him before?"
Rurie asked, in an earnest, eager tone.
"I cannot tell, my son. His face most anrely calls up some strange emotion in my mind, but I think I never saw him before."

"And yet he seems familiar to me," the son resumed. "Those eyes I surely have seen he fore, but to save my soul I cannot re-member when or where."

And so Rurie pondered and pondered, but to

After he had retired to his bed he lay awake and thought of the strange face; and all through the night his dreams were but startling visious of the Black Monk.

CHAPTER II.

A STRANGE PROCEEDING.
When Rurie came down in the morning he found the monk already there, and breakfast nearly ready. But little was said during the moal. The monk seemed busy with thoughts of his own, and Ruric was wholly ongrossed in studying the strange man's features, and pondering upon the various doubts and sur-mises that had entered his mind. After the meal was over the monk accompanied the gunmaker to his shop, and there he spent some time in examining the quaint articles of nachinery that were used in the manufacture Rurie was engaged in finishing a pair of pistols, and for some minutes the mank had stood silently by his side watching his movements. At length the youth stopped in his work and laid the pistol down. "Excuse me, good father," he said, rather nervously, at the same time looking his visitor in the face; "but I must ask you a question.

"How should I know?" the monk answered, with a smile.

have acted the Good Samaritan toward, and I hope I may some time return the favor."

"No, no," quickly responded the youth; "if you return it, then it will be a favor no more. I have only done for you what every man should do for his neighbor; and so far from needing thanks for my services. I would rather give them for the occasion, for I know of no source of joy so pure and uncontaminated as or that feeling in the soul which tells us we have done a good net."

"The dark mank reached forth and took the youthful artisan's band, and, with more than youthful artisan's band, and, with more than this;" the rount cried, mally.

"Never, sir."

"It is the duke's command," he said, at length.

"The Duke of Tula holds no power of command over me," was the gunmaker's calm reply.

"Beware! Once more I say: Sign this peace."

"You but waste your breath, Sir Count, in speaking thus. You have my answer."

"By heavens! Ruric Nevel, you shall sign this!" the rount cried, mally.

"Never, sir."

the storm.

"Hark!" exclaimed his mother, bending looking the boy in the face. "Do you think ber ear in a listening attitude. "Was that a you have seen him before?" "Hark!" exclaimed his mother, bending her ear in a listening attitude, "Was that a knock upon our door?"

"Surely no one is out on such a night that could seek shelter here," continued Rurie.
"You must have—"

"You must have—"

"You must have—"

"You must have—"

"Teamnot tell, my muster. I may have seen him before?"

"I cannot tell, my muster. I may have seen him before?"

"I cannot tell, my muster. I may have seen would not suppose that my memory would serve you better than your own."

"You must have—"

The youth did not finish his sentence, for at that moment the knock came so loud that it was not to be mistaken. The youth caught up the candle and hastened to the door. He opened it, but the blast came roaring in, whirling a cloud of snow into Ruric's face and extinguishing the light at once.

"Is there any one here?" the gummaker asked, bowing his head and shielding his eyes from the driving snow with one hand.

"Yes," returned a voice from the Stygtan darkness. "In heavon's name lot me in, or I shall perish."

"The youth did not finish his sentence, for at that moment the knock came so loud that it the gazed into Paul's face, and he fancied he detected some show of intelligence there which no more questions at present. He had asked anough, he thought, upon such a subject, and no more about it, feeling sure that if his boy know anything which would be for his master's interest to know it would be communicated in due season. So he applied himself anew to his work, and at noon the pistols were finished.

Towards the middle of the afternoon, just as Ruric bad finished tempering some parts of a gun-lock, the back door of his shop was opened and two men entered. They were young men, dressed in costly furs, and both of them stout and good-looking. The gunmaker recognized them as the Count Courad Damonoff and his friend Stephen Urzen.
"I think I speak with Rurie Nevel," said the count, maving forward.

"You do," returned Ruric, not at all sur-prised by the visit, since people of all classes were in the habit of calling at his place to rder arms.

The count turned a shade paler than before and his nether lip trembled; but Ruric thought that might be the result of coming from the cold into a warm atmosphere. However, he was soon undecleved, for the count's next remark was significant.
"You are acquainted with the Lady Resalind Valdai?" he said.
"I am," answered Rurie, now beginning to wonder.

wonder. "Woll, sir," resumed Damonoff, with much haughtiness, "perhaps my business can be quickly and satisfactorily settled. It is my desire to make the hady Rosalind my wife." Ruric Nevel started at those words, and he clasped his bands to hide their tremulousness. But he was not long debating upon an

"And why have you come to me with this

"The right that every man has to pave the way for his own rights," replied Damonoff, sharply. "But if you choose not to answer, lot it pass. I know you do love the lady. And now I ask you to renonnce all claims to her hand." "Sir Count, your tongue runs into strange moods of speech. I renounce all claims to Rosalind Valdai's hand?—Was't so you

"It is snowing again, faster than ever," remarked Paul, as he took his seat at the table.

"Ab," returned Ruric, resting his kuife a few moments while he bent his ear to listen to the voice of the storm. "I had hoped 'twould snow no more for the present. The snow is deep enough now. And how it.

"Perhaps you will inform me what claims I way have in that quarter," and here here? "Aye, sir—precisely so."

"Perhaps you will inform me wha and wealth are equal with hers. My station, at all events. She may possess the undivided right to more property than I do. But that matters not. I love her, and must have her for my wife. I have been to see the noble duke, her guardian, and he objects not to my soit. But he informed me that there was one impediment, and that was her love for you He knows full well—as I know, and as al must know-that she could never become you wife; but yet he is anxious not to interfere too much against her inclinatious. So a sim-ple denial from you, to the effect that you can never claim her hand, is all that is necessary You understand me. I trust. We seek this only for the fair lady's own good. Of course, you must be award that the duke would never consent to her union with you; and yot he would wish to have your denial to show to Rosalind when he announces his decision. I have a paper here all drawn up, and all that will be necessary is simply your signature. Here—it is only a plain, simple syowal on your part that you have no hopes nor thoughts. your part that you have no hopes nor thoughts of seeking the hand of the lady in marriage." As the count spoke he drew a paper from he bosom of his marten doublet, and having opened it he handed it towards the gunmaker. But Ruric took it not. He drew back and gazed the visitor sternly in the face. "Sir Count," he cried, in a tone full of noble ndignation, "what do you suppose I sm? Do you mean to tell me that Olga, Duke of Tula, has commissioned you to obtain such a re-nunciation of me?"

"Stephen," spoke the count, turning to his companion, "you heard the instructions the duke gave me this morning?"
"Aye," returned Urzen, directing his speech to Ruric, "I did hear; and you have stated the case plainly. "I may be as much surprised as yourself," resumed the count, haughtily, "at this strange taste of the duke. Why he should seek this signal from you I can only imagine upon his desire to call up no regrets in the bosom of his fair ward. He knows that she was once inti-mate with you, and that she new feels a warm friendship for you. For her sake he would have this signal from you."

"But how for her sake?" asked Ruric.

"Why." returned Damonoff, "do you not see?
Rosalind, in the simplicity of her heart, may think that you-a-that you might claim her love; and out of pure principle grant it to you omply because you were the first claimant Sa" But I never claimed her love," said Rurie, warmly. "And you have marked the grace—the loveliness—the surpassing beauty of the noble giri?"
"I know she is beautiful, my son; and also that she is good—at least, so I think."
"Then what but love could move me with deep thought her? Oh, my mother, I do love her. I love her with the wholestrength of my heart and soul."
"And are there not hundreds whom you have seen in this great city—aye, thousands—whom you might recognize as you not that," the youth quickly replied, his eyes burning deeply, and his open how flushing. "Did I not know she loved me, is sure I would never have allowed my thoughts such range. We were children togother, and even then we loved. "Ah—it may he so; but not like this. There may he a thousand faces I would recollect to have seen, but not one of them would excite even a passing emotion in my sout. But your face calls up some powerful emotion—some startling memory of the past—which betters me. Who are you, good father? What are you? Where have we met before? Was it in Spain?"

"Then he may make his mark," rejoined the count, in the same contemptuous tone.
"It might not require much more urging to nduce me to make my mark in a manner not induce me to make my mark in a manner not at all agreeable to you, sir," the youth retorted, with his teeth now set, and the dark veins upon his brow starting more plainly out. "You have come upon my premises, and you have sought your purpose. You now have your answer, and for your own sake—for my sake—I beg you to leave me."
